

L-Università
ta' Malta

DGP0959 | AI TOOLS FOR WORK AND STUDY

Your AI Toolkit

A practical beginner course for using AI clearly, critically, and usefully.

Session 01 / 08

Graham Pellegrini | DegreePlus Programme

University of Malta | 14 October 2026

VISUAL PROTOTYPE 02

Start by naming the job

A good AI workflow begins with a task type, not with a tool name.

EXPLORE

Use AI to map a topic and find useful questions.

DRAFT

Turn rough notes into a first version you can improve.

VERIFY

Check important claims against trusted sources.

A stronger prompt gives context

WEAK

"Write me an email about missing class."

BETTER

"Draft a polite email to my lecturer explaining that I missed today's session due to illness. Ask what I should review before next week."

Prompt pattern: extract decisions

Summarise this document for a student who needs to act on it.

Return:

1. main point;
2. dates or deadlines;
3. decisions already made;
4. actions I need to take;
5. claims I should verify.

Turn a messy goal into an action plan

Hands-on activity

- 1 Choose one real assignment, project, or student task.
- 2 Ask AI to break it into milestones, actions, and risks.
- 3 Revise the result so every action has a clear next step.
- 4 Mark which parts require human judgement.

Check before pasting

Do not paste private, sensitive, client, patient, student, or unpublished university information into an AI tool unless you know it is allowed.

Remove names, IDs, and contact details.

Use fictional examples when possible.

When in doubt, stop and check policy.

Do not accept the first answer

FIRST ANSWER

Often sounds polished, but may hide weak assumptions or miss your audience.

COMPARED ANSWER

Ask for alternatives, critique, and trade-offs. Then combine the best parts yourself.

What to take away

- 1 Choose the tool by task: explore, draft, compare, plan, present, or verify.
- 2 Good prompts include purpose, context, audience, constraints, and format.
- 3 The final judgement stays with you, especially for private or important work.